Pockets Full of Fun Visits Laurens Public Library!

Pockets Full of Fun entertained puppet enthusiasts of all ages at the Laurens Public Library recently. This year, Ventriloquist Lisa Laird brought along Amethyst the Cat, Jethro the Frog, Shiloh the Bunny, 4 "Sports Authority" ball puppets and she even grew a talking donut from a seed (a Cheerio!) All this fun centered around her theme of "Read, Set, READ!" This picture of the kids laughing really captures the spirit of the afternoon.

Jethro the Frog taught Brayton, Karson & Amethyst how to properly jump, Olympic style. Then they taught the entire audience at the Laurens Public Library: Jump on one foot, then the other, turn around, hop 3 times; repeat faster and faster!

Author Heather Gudenkauf Visits LPL!

Author Heather Gudenkauf entertained patrons of the Laurens Public Library with anecdotes from her childhood and adult life, stories of being a writer, as well as telling us of the process she goes through once she is finished with her first draft manuscript. One of my favorite anecdotes that Heather told was that as a child she would empty the toy box, crawl inside and read by the light of her flashlight. She also shared that she received word that her first book “Weight of Silence” was on the New York Times Best Seller List when she was spending time in the hospital with her son as he underwent treatments for cancer. Her talk was much enjoyed by everyone who attended!

Educational Series to help Livestock Industry Prepare for Veterinary Feed Directive

Iowa State University Extension and Outreach, Iowa Farm Bureau, and the Iowa Veterinary Medical Association are partnering to offer an educational series about the Veterinary Feed Directive (VFD). Iowa State Extension beef program specialist Chris Clark said Iowa veterinarians, livestock producers, and feed industry personnel are invited to participate.

“The program will include a general overview of the VFD, species break-outs and discussion panels featuring veterinarians, producers and feed industry personnel,” Clark said. “The implementation date of Jan. 1, 2017, is approaching and at this point people may have some specific questions or scenarios that they are unsure about. Hopefully we can help answer some questions and clarify some of those issues.”

Iowa veterinarians, livestock producers and feed industry personnel are invited to attend any of the 11 locations. Each program features breakout and discussion sessions, with a primary objective of helping attendees learn about the roles and responsibilities of all involved parties.

“Implementation of the VFD will require cooperation and communication between veterinarians, producers and feed industry personnel,” Clark said. “It’s important that each party knows not only their own responsibilities but also what to expect from the other two parties. It may be really valuable to hear what others are thinking and planning in regard to implementation of the VFD.”

The series runs from Aug. 22 through Sept. 1 with specific times set for each location. There is no fee to attend, but preregistration is encouraged to assist organizers with planning. Please register by calling the number associated with the desired session.

Yard and Garden: Controlling Crabgrass

Summer is prime time for being outdoors, enjoying lawns and landscapes and making the most of the warmest months of the year. Crabgrass can ruin some of that fun by damaging a landscape's appearance and overall feel.

ISU Extension and Outreach horticulturists can help answer questions regarding crabgrass and keeping it under control. To have additional questions answered, contact the ISU Hortline at 515-294-3108 or hortline@iastate.edu.

What is the light green, wide-bladed, weedy grass in my lawn?

The light green, wide-bladed grass is probably crabgrass. Crabgrass (Digitaria spp.) is an annual, warm-season grass. Crabgrass seeds begin to germinate when soil temperatures reach 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Germination usually begins about mid-April in southern Iowa, early May in northern parts of the state. Crabgrass continues to germinate over several weeks from spring into summer.

While crabgrass seed germination begins in spring, plants don't become highly visible in lawns until summer. Crabgrass is a low growing, spreading plant with light green foliage. The leaf blades are approximately 1/4 inch wide. Seedheads appear as several finger-like projections at the top of the main stem. Crabgrass grows rapidly during warm summer weather. Growth slows with the arrival of cooler temperatures in late summer. Plants are destroyed with the first hard frost in fall. However, before it dies a single crabgrass plant can produce thousands of seeds.

How do I control crabgrass in my lawn? The best way to prevent crabgrass infestations in lawns is to maintain a thick, healthy lawn through proper mowing, irrigation and fertilization. Crabgrass will have a difficult time germinating and surviving in a dense stand of turfgrass.

While cultural practices are important, herbicides may be necessary to control crabgrass in lawns. Crabgrass is most easily controlled with an application of a preemergence herbicide in spring. If crabgrass appears in early summer, postemergence herbicides can be used.

When using a preemergence herbicide, the keys to successful control of crabgrass in lawns are the correct timing of the herbicide application and proper application of the material. Preemergence herbicides must be applied before the crabgrass germinates. If the material is applied too early, crabgrass seeds that germinate late in the season will not be controlled. If applied too late, some crabgrass will have already germinated. Preemergence herbicides should normally be applied in early to mid-April in southern Iowa, mid-April to May 1 in central Iowa, and late April to early May in northern portions of the state.

Weather often varies considerably from year to year in Iowa. Accordingly, gardeners should make adjustments in the timing of the preemergence herbicide application. If the weather in March and April is consistently warmer than normal, apply the preemergence herbicide early in the normal time period. Apply the herbicide late in the recommended time period if Iowa is experiencing a cooler than normal late winter/early spring. If you're still uncertain as to when to apply a preemergence herbicide, Mother Nature provides some helpful clues. Crabgrass seed germination usually begins with the end of the forsythia bloom season or when redbud trees reach full bloom.

Postemergence control of crabgrass can be obtained with an application of quinclorac to actively growing crabgrass in early to mid-summer. The later the application, the less effective the herbicide. A second application 7 to 10 days after the first treatment may be required for complete control.

How do I control crabgrass in my flower bed? In flower and vegetable gardens, hoeing and hand pulling are the best control options. When cultivating the garden, avoid deep tillage. The roots of many vegetables and flowers grow near the soil surface. Deep cultivation will cut off some of these roots. Also, deep cultivation will bring deeply buried weed seeds to the soil surface where they can germinate. Hand pulling is best done after a good rain.

Identify Correct Cold Climate Grape Cultivar with Publication

ISU Extension and Outreach publication provides guidance for planting grapes that produce in Iowa's climate

Interest in and production of grapes has significantly increased across the upper Midwest and other cold climate regions. Because of this increasing interest, Iowa State University Extension and Outreach has reproduced and updated its popular publication on grape cultivars.

The publication, "A Review of Cold Climate Grape Cultivars" (HORT 3040), is available through the Extension Store. The review was done by Diana Cochran, assistant professor and extension fruit specialist at Iowa State University. The publication was initially written by Lisa Smiley, a graduate student in horticulture at Iowa State.

One of the problems producers face is choosing cultivars that will withstand severe winters and mature in short growing seasons while also being productive.

"The grape cultivars in this book are valuable because they have been bred specifically for the climate found in the northeast and Midwest," Cochran said. "Producers looking for the right type of grape to plant and students studying viticulture will find this information extremely helpful."

Highlighting cultivars that can productively grow in cold climates is important because of the limitations of a shorter growing season. The cultivar must be able to withstand the lowest temperatures expected in the area. It is also preferred that cultivars used have a later bud break to avoid any effects of a late spring frost.

"These cold climate cultivars are why we have a grape industry in Iowa," Cochran said. "We simply can't grow the same kind of grapes grown in other places like California or Washington because of our climate. These cultivars are specifically bred to withstand our cold winters and humid summers."

The publication features 73 different grape cultivars that can be grown in the Midwest and other cold climates. Each entry provides detailed information about the cultivar including pedigree, origin, introduction, type, color, berry, cluster and viticultural characteristics. Diseases and pests the cultivar is susceptible to, quality of wine from the grape, growing season, hardiness and use are also included for each cultivar.

"The specific information provided for each grape is vital to students, homeowners, commercial growers and researchers so they can look up information on a grape's cold hardiness zone, wine use and style of wine produced," Cochran said. "This publication provides information on each grape's cultural aspects as well as a wide base of knowledge about each grape's wine style."
